

Interfaith Garden
Saturday 4/29/2023

Carla dropped off the first harvest from the Garden...asparagus, chives and garlic chives. The rhubarb was not quite ready. Once again, we were the first giving garden to have fresh produce to drop off this spring.

One of the volunteers, Jackie, talked about growing food from what she eats. To prove the point, she brought in seeds she saved from some Korean melons she ate. We now have a little "Korean melon nursery" along the fence. It is an experiment to see what happens.

Along with the planting and weeding, there was the job of making paths. Carla is recycling last fall's leaves as the base material for the paths.

There are often other visitors we encounter at the Garden.... if you look carefully enough. This Saturday there was an abundance of toads.
